ABSTRACT

The purposes of this thesis were to study the children's duty of students on the primary school, Wat Hongpathumawas, Pathumthani province, the problems or obstacles and the comments of doing the children's duty to their parents. The sampling groups were selected by the specified random from the 88 persons who are the students in the primary fifth class and 87 persons who are the students in the sixth class. Its tools are the questionnaire that has the confidence in 0.86 mean. The basic statistics consists of the percentage, mean, and deviation for this research. The other hand, it is chosen to learn its objectives. It is the most believable that kinds of statistics are t-dependent and the analysis of covariance: ANOVA.

An action on the children's duty consists of 1) their parents had gone to relax by the way that they were persuaded by the children in compensating parents the good actions, 2) in the helping and reducing the parents' burden, their children knew how to save the money to buy things as they wanted possessing, 3) in the protecting the good honor of the family, they took their parents visit cousin and friends, 4) in the acting by themselves as the good, they took care of their parents by giving drugs or cleaning their parents who were sometimes sick, 5) in the making the given merit, they took their parents participating in the good or virtuous activities.

The studying variances were found that 1) the girl students were the higher level than the boy students in their duty, 2) the fifth of the primary school was the higher level than the sixth class, 3) the third son or daughter and the first ones, 4) the students whose parents had done the cleaning work in the different places were the higher level than the students whose parents had been shopkeepers or sellers or business men or the officials and the general workers. When results were checked, the statistics was found that the children duty to their parents were not significant statistics on the 0.05 level.
